

THIRD EDITION

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING

A Guide and Reference

with Readings

John J. Ruszkiewicz
Jay T. Dolmage

Available with

How to Write Anything

how to start

guide

need a form for your writing?

Genres 2

- 1 Narratives 4
- 2 Reports 36
- 3 Arguments 66
- 4 Evaluations 100
- 5 Causal Analyses 128
- 6 Proposals 160
- 7 Literary Analyses 184
- 8 Rhetorical Analyses 218

already got an assignment?

Special Assignments 250

- 9 Essay Examinations 252
- 10 Position Papers 258
- 11 Annotated Bibliographies 266
- 12 Synthesis Papers 272
- 13 E-mails 282
- 14 Business Letters 288
- 15 Résumés 296
- 16 Personal Statements 304
- 17 Writing Portfolios 312
- 18 Oral Reports 322

reference

need help getting started?

Ideas 332

- 19 Brainstorming 334
- 20 Smart Reading 340
- 21 Critical Thinking 343
- 22 Experts 350
- 23 Writer's Block 356

stuck in the middle?

Shaping & Drafting 360

- 24 Thesis 362
- 25 Strategies 367
- 26 Organization 374
- 27 Outlines 377
- 28 Paragraphs 383
- 29 Transitions 387
- 30 Introductions and Conclusions 391
- 31 Titles 395

want to improve your draft?

Style 398

- 32 High, Middle, and Low Style 400
- 33 Inclusive and Culturally Sensitive Style 408
- 34 Vigorous, Clear, Economical Style 412

A Guide and Reference with Readings

reference

ready to revise?

Revising & Editing 420

- 35 Revising Your Own Work 422
- 36 Peer Editing 428

need research help?

Research & Sources 434

- 37 Beginning Your Research 436
- 38 Finding Print and Online Sources 442
- 39 Doing Field Research 447
- 40 Evaluating Sources 451
- 41 Annotating Sources 456
- 42 Summarizing Sources 460
- 43 Paraphrasing Sources 463
- 44 Incorporating Sources into Your Work 466
- 45 Documenting Sources 470
- 46 MLA Documentation and Format 472
- 47 APA Documentation and Format 512

need design help?

Media & Design 540

- 48 Understanding Digital Media 542
- 49 Tables, Graphs, and Infographics 550
- 50 Designing Print and Online Documents 557

need proofreading help?

Common Errors 540

- 51 Capitalization 568
- 52 Apostrophes 571
- 53 Commas 573
- 54 Comma Splices, Run-Ons, and Fragments 577
- 55 Subject/Verb Agreement 581
- 56 Irregular Verbs 585
- 57 Pronoun/Antecedent Agreement 587
- 58 Pronoun Reference 589
- 59 Pronoun Case 591
- 60 Misplaced and Dangling Modifiers 595
- 61 Parallelism 597

reader

need more examples?

Readings 600

- 62 Narratives 602
- 63 Reports 646
- 64 Arguments 689
- 65 Evaluations 720
- 66 Causal Analyses 759
- 67 Proposals 809
- 68 Literary Analyses 840
- 69 Rhetorical Analyses 912

THIRD EDITION

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING

A Guide and Reference
with Readings

John J. Ruszkiewicz

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS AT AUSTIN

Jay T. Dolmage

UNIVERSITY OF WATERLOO

BEDFORD/ST. MARTIN'S

Boston ◆ New York

For Bedford/St. Martin's

Vice President, Editorial, Macmillan Higher Education Humanities:
Edwin Hill

Editorial Director for English and Music: Karen Henry

Publisher for Composition and Business and Technical Writing:

Leasa Burton

Executive Editor: Molly Parke

Developmental Editor: Sarah Macomber

Senior Production Editor: Deborah Baker

Assistant Production Manager: Joe Ford

Marketing Manager: Emily Rowin

Editorial Assistant: Rachel Childs

Copyeditor: Jennifer Greenstein

Indexer: Steve Csipke

Director of Rights and Permissions: Hilary Newman

Senior Art Director: Anna Palchik

Text Design: Anna Palchik

Cover Design: Billy Boardman

Composition: Cenveo Publisher Services

Printing and Binding: RR Donnelley and Sons

Copyright © 2015, 2012, 2010 by Bedford/St. Martin's

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, except as may be expressly permitted by the applicable copyright statutes or in writing by the Publisher.

Manufactured in the United States of America.

9 8 7 6 5 4
f e d c b a

For information, write: Bedford/St. Martin's, 75 Arlington Street, Boston, MA 02116
(617-399-4000)

ISBN: 978-1-4576-6703-9

Acknowledgments

Text acknowledgments and copyrights appear at the back of the book on pages A-1–8, which constitute an extension of the copyright page. Art acknowledgments and copyrights appear on the same page as the art selections they cover. It is a violation of the law to reproduce these selections by any means whatsoever without the written permission of the copyright holder.

Preface

Through its first two editions, readers of How to Write Anything: A Guide and Reference have been intrigued—and perhaps attracted—by its title, admittedly not a humble one. Should any book, especially one designed expressly as a guide for college writers, promise so much? The simple answer is no; the more intriguing one is maybe.

What, after all, do experienced writers do when they face an assignment? As the new Introduction to this edition explains in detail, they size up a project to figure out what genre of writing best meets their needs and those of readers. They locate and examine specific examples of that genre, imitating some features and modifying or rejecting others. Then they shape a work within that genre themselves, bringing appropriate rhetorical, organizational, research, and language skills to bear on their writing. It is the goal of How to Write Anything to guide college writers through these complex choices for their most common academic and professional assignments. In doing so, it lays out key strategies to follow in any situation that requires purposeful writing.

But rarely do different writers work in the same order, and the same writer is likely to follow different paths for different projects. So How to Write Anything doesn't define a single process of writing or imagine that all students using it will have the same skills and interests. Instead, a modular chapter organization and an innovative system of cross-references enables writers to find exactly the information they want at the level of specificity they need—which pretty much sums up the rationale for the book. How to Write Anything is both focused and flexible, marrying the resources of a full rhetoric to the efficiency of a compact handbook. That commitment to clarity and efficiency is even more evident in this latest edition.

A Guide, Reference, and Reader

Parts 1 and 2 of How to Write Anything make up the Guide, which covers genres of writing that instructors assign in composition classes or that students encounter in other college courses. For each genre, writers are offered a framework presented as a flexible series of rhetorical choices—Exploring purpose and topic; Understanding your audience; Finding and developing materials; Creating a structure; and Choosing a style and design. The explanations here are direct, practical, and economical, encouraging students to explore a range of options within genres. If writers do need more help with a particular topic, targeted cross-references make it easy to find in the Reference section.

The Reference section (Parts 3 through 9) covers key aspects of the writing process—with separate parts devoted to Ideas; Shaping & Drafting; Style; Revising & Editing; Research & Sources; Media & Design; and Common Errors. Points mentioned in the Guide section get expanded treatment here for students who need it. For instance, writers might turn to these sections to find techniques for generating arguments, improving their sentences, or overcoming writer's block. The organization of How to Write Anything lets students find precisely what they need without getting bogged down in other material.

Part 10, the Reader, is an anthology of forty additional contemporary selections organized by genres covered in the Guide. Drawn from a variety of sources such as print and online journals, books, scholarly and popular magazines, blogs, and graphic novels, the readings offer both solid models for writing as well as compelling topics for students to respond to. Some examples include Jane McGonigal on how an hour a day of video games can enrich our lives, Neil deGrasse Tyson on the “cosmic perspective,” and evaluations of everything from cooking shows to Jay-Z to Domino’s pizza. The Reader includes fresh content from established authors such as Zadie Smith, Patton Oswalt, and Sasha Frere-Jones, as well as from newer voices such as Kamakshi Ayyar and Ross Perlin. Headnotes provide context for all readings in the text, and selections in the Reader are followed by analysis questions and writing assignments, which feature cross-references from the questions back to the Guide and Reference sections of the book. These readings, and the questions that follow them, are intended to help students more deeply consider and use the major genres in How to Write Anything.

Key Features

A Flexible Writing Process and Design that Works

How to Write Anything works hard to make its materials accessible and attractive to writers accustomed to intuitive design. For instance, “How to Start” questions at the opening of each chapter in the Guide anticipate where writers get stuck and direct them to exactly what they need: One writer might seek advice about finding a topic for a report, while another with a topic already in hand wants prompts for developing that idea.

Similarly, frequent cross-references between the Guide and Reference sections target the topics that students are likely to want to know more about. The simple language and unobtrusive design of the cross-references make it easy for students to stay focused on their own writing while finding related material—no explanations necessary and minimal clutter on the page. Readings and images throughout the book are similarly highlighted and variously annotated so that readers, once again, find information they need precisely when and where they require it.

Media-savvy students know that learning occurs in more than just words, so this edition preserves one of the favorite design features of How To Write Anything: its context-rich “How To” Visual Tutorials. Through drawings, photographs, and screenshots, these items offer step-by-step instructions for topics, ranging from how to use a writing center productively to how to cite selected materials in both MLA and APA formats.

Writing Worth Reading—From Professionals and Students

How to Write Anything: A Guide and Reference contains an ample selection of readings, more than thirty in the Guide chapters alone, representing a wide range of genres. Selections illustrate key principles and show how genres change in response to different contexts, audiences, and—increasingly important—media. Every chapter in the Guide includes many complete examples of the genres under discussion, most of these texts annotated to show how they meet criteria set down in How to Write Anything. The assignments at the end of the Part 1 chapters are closely tied to the chapter readings, so students can use the sample texts both as models and as springboards for discussion and exploration.

Just as important, the models in How to Write Anything are approachable. The readings—some by published professionals and others by student writers—reveal the diversity of contemporary writing being done in these genres. The student samples are especially inventive—chosen to motivate undergraduates to take comparable risks with their own writing. Together, the readings and exercises suggest to writers the many creative possibilities of working in these genres.

New to This Edition

How to Write Anything was designed from the outset to be a practical, highly readable guide to writing for a generation not fond of long books. The third edition doubles down on that commitment. It's smarter, more efficient, and shorter.

- Vibrant new Introduction. Designed as a starting point for a course, a new Introduction explains the structure and rationale of How to Write Anything in practical terms students will appreciate. Concepts that play a key role in the book such as genre, subgenres, writing processes, and even audiences are defined and discussed.
 - New chapter on writing portfolios. Because more and more courses and college programs ask students to assemble writing portfolios, How to Write Anything introduces a new chapter (Chapter 17) explaining exactly how to compose, select, edit, and present materials for this assignment. The chapter gives special attention to composing student reflections on their coursework.
 - New “Reading the Genre” prompts. All major readings in Part 1 are now preceded by a brief exercise or query designed to make readers think about the reading's genre or genre strategies.
 - Improved chapter organization. Each chapter in the Guide sections has been reviewed to enhance the clarity of its presentations. Chapter 8, Rhetorical Analyses, for example, now offers a chart to summarize key questions for such a paper. And every chapter in Part 2, Special Assignments, has a new structure that makes the discussion of the genre clearer and, in most cases, simpler.
-

- Focused writing throughout the book. How to Write Anything has been fine-tuned to acknowledge students' preference for brevity and clarity. Chapters get to the point quicker, examples have been tightened, and some chapters have been combined to eliminate overlap.
- Fresh readings and images. New readings and images throughout the book keep How to Write Anything topical and challenging. New materials include a literacy narrative by Allegra Goodman, a movie review of The Hunger Games, a student's research report on women running marathons, a Jen Sorensen editorial cartoon on student debt, and Bert and Ernie on the cover of The New Yorker.
- New "Genre Moves" prompts in the Reader section. All chapters in the Reader section now begin with a brief excerpt by a well-known writer, followed by a prompt designed to get readers thinking about the genre presented.

Get the Most Out of Your Course with How to Write Anything

Bedford/St. Martin's offers resources and format choices that help you and your students get even more out of your book and course. To learn more about or to order any of the following products, contact your Bedford/St. Martin's sales representative, e-mail sales support (sales_support@bfwpub.com), or visit the Web site at macmillanhighered.com/howtowrite3e/catalog.

LaunchPad for How to Write Anything with Readings: Where Students Learn

LaunchPad provides engaging content and new ways to get the most out of your course. Get an interactive e-book combined with unique, book-specific materials in a fully customizable course space; then assign and mix our resources with yours.

- Multimedia selections that make the most of what the Web can do with carefully selected video and multimodal readings for each chapter in Part 1.
- Pre-built units—including readings, videos, quizzes, discussion groups, and more—are easy to adapt and assign by adding your own materials and mixing them with our high-quality multimedia content and ready-made assessment options, such as LearningCurve adaptive quizzing.

- LaunchPad also provides access to a gradebook that provides a clear window on the performance of your whole class, individual students, and even individual assignments.
- A streamlined interface helps students focus on what's due, and social commenting tools let them engage, make connections, and learn from each other. Use LaunchPad on its own or integrate it with your school's learning management system so that your class is always on the same page.

To get the most out of your course, order LaunchPad for How to Write Anything with Readings packaged with the print book free for a limited time. (LaunchPad for How to Write Anything with Readings can also be purchased on its own.) An activation code is required.

To order LaunchPad for How to Write Anything with Readings with the print book, use ISBN 978-1-319-02421-5.

Choose from Alternative Formats of How to Write Anything

Bedford/St. Martin's offers a range of affordable formats, allowing students to choose the one that works best for them. For details, visit macmillanhigherred.com/howtowrite3e/formats.

- Spiral-bound. To order the spiral-bound edition of How to Write Anything (the brief version of this book), use ISBN 978-1-4576-9368-7.
- Bedford e-Book to Go. A portable, downloadable e-book is available at about half the price of the print book. To order the Bedford e-Book to Go for How to Write Anything, use ISBN 978-1-4576-9373-1. To order the Bedford e-Book to Go for How to Write Anything with Readings, use ISBN 978-1-4576-9388-5.
- Other popular e-book formats. For details, visit macmillanhigherred.com/ebooks.

Select Value Packages

Add value to your text by packaging one of the following resources with How to Write Anything. To learn more about package options for any of the following products, contact your Bedford/St. Martin's sales representative or visit macmillanhigherred.com/howtowrite3e/catalog.

LearningCurve for Readers and Writers, Bedford/St. Martin's adaptive quizzing program, quickly learns what students already know and helps them practice what they don't yet understand. Game-like quizzing motivates students to engage with their course, and reporting tools help teachers discern their students' needs. LearningCurve for Readers and Writers can be packaged with How to Write Anything at a significant discount. An activation code is required. To order LearningCurve packaged with the print book, use ISBN 978-1-319-03135-1. For details, visit learningcurveworks.com.

i-series This popular series presents multimedia tutorials in a flexible format—because there are things you can't do in a book.

- ix visualizing composition 2.0 helps students put into practice key rhetorical and visual concepts. To order ix visualizing composition packaged with the print book, contact your sales representative for a package ISBN.
- i-claim: visualizing argument offers a new way to see argument—with 6 multimedia tutorials, an illustrated glossary, and a wide array of multimedia arguments. To order i-claim: visualizing argument packaged with the print book, contact your sales representative for a package ISBN.

Portfolio Keeping, Third Edition, by Nedra Reynolds and Elizabeth Davis provides all the information students need to use the portfolio method successfully in a writing course. Portfolio Teaching, a companion guide for writing instructors, provides the practical information instructors and writing program administrators need to teach using the portfolio method. To order Portfolio Keeping packaged with the print book, contact your sales representative for a package ISBN.

Make Learning Fun with Re:Writing 3

macmillanhighered.com/rewriting

New open online resources with videos and interactive elements engage students in new ways of writing. You'll find tutorials about using common digital writing tools, an interactive peer review game, Extreme Paragraph Makeover, and more—all for free and for fun. Visit macmillanhighered.com/rewriting.

Instructor Resources

macmillanhighered.com/howtowrite3e

You have a lot to do in your course. Bedford/St. Martin's wants to make it easy for you to find the support you need—and to get it quickly.

Teaching with How to Write Anything: A Guide and Reference with Readings is available in print and as a PDF that can be downloaded from the Bedford/St. Martin's online catalog at the URL above. In addition to chapter overviews and teaching tips, the instructor's manual includes sample syllabi, classroom activities, and teaching goals.

Teaching Central offers the entire list of Bedford/St. Martin's print and online professional resources in one place. You'll find landmark reference works, sourcebooks on pedagogical issues, award-winning collections, and practical advice for the classroom—all free for instructors. Visit macmillanhighered.com/teachingcentral.

Bits collects creative ideas for teaching a range of composition topics in an easily searchable blog format. A community of teachers—leading scholars, authors, and editors—discuss revision, research, grammar and style, technology, peer review, and much more. Take, use, adapt, and pass the ideas around. Then, come back to the site to comment or share your own suggestion. Visit bedfordbits.com.

Acknowledgments

The following reviewers were very helpful through several drafts of this book: Patricia Baines, Middle Tennessee State University; Patricia Bonner, North Carolina A&T State University; Jonathan Bradley, Middle Tennessee State University; Bob Brown, Chippewa Valley Technical College; Diana Kaye Campbell, Forsyth Technical Community College; Tricia Capansky, University of Tennessee at Martin; Susan Chism, Greenville College; Cheri Crenshaw, Dixie State University; Linsey Cuti, Kankakee Community College; Jason DePolo, North Carolina A&T State University; Amy Eggert, Bradley University; Bart Ganzert, Forsyth Technical Community College; Carl Gerriets, Century College; Anissa Graham, University of North Alabama; Gary Hafer, Lycoming College; Elizabeth Hope, Delgado Community College; Pamela Kincheloe, Rochester Institute of Technology; Michael Leggs, Saint Paul College; Lila MacLellan, Pace University; Nicholas Mauriello, University of North Alabama; Chanomi Maxwell-Parish, Northern Michigan University; Linda Miller, Middlesex Community College; Gayle Murchison, College of William and Mary; Sein Oh, University of Illinois at Chicago; Sayanti Ganguly Puckett, Johnson County Community College; Christa Raney, University of North Alabama; Jeremy Reed, Central Methodist University; Theodore Rollins, Johnson County Community College; James Sprouse, Piedmont International University; Janette Thompson, University of Nebraska at Kearney; Patrick Tompkins, John Tyler Community College; Jonathan Torres, Front Range Community College; and Justin Williamson, Pearl River Community College.

All textbooks are collaborations, but we have never before worked on a project that more creatively drew upon the resources of an editorial team and publisher. How to Write Anything began with the confidence of Joan Feinberg, Director of Digital Composition, that we could develop a groundbreaking brief rhetoric. She had the patience to allow the idea to develop at its own pace and then assembled an incredible team to support it. We are grateful for the contributions of Edwin Hill, Vice President; Karen Henry, Editorial Director; and Leasa Burton, Publisher. We are also indebted to Anna Palchik, Senior Art Director and designer of the text, and Deb Baker, Senior Production Editor. Special thanks to Peter Arkle and Anna Veltfort for their drawings, Christian Wise for his photographs, and to Kate Mayhew for her help with art research. They all deserve credit for the distinctive and accessible visual style of How to Write Anything.

For her marketing efforts, we are grateful to the guidance offered by Emily Rowin and, of course, to the efforts of the incomparable Bedford/St. Martin's sales team. And for all manner of tasks, including coordinating permissions and manuscript preparation, we thank Rachel Childs.

Our greatest debt is to Ellen Darion, who was our original editor on this lengthy project and saw this edition through to the completion of its first draft: always confident about what we could accomplish, patient when chapters went off-track, and perpetually good-humored. If How to Write Anything works, it is because Ellen never wavered from our high aspirations for the book. Her hand is in every chapter, every choice of reading, and every assignment.

Succeeding Ellen as editor on this latest version, Sarah Macomber joined a project she was well familiar with—having conceived How to Write Anything's much admired visual tutorials. Sarah has given thoughtful attention to every corner of the book, helping to assure that this edition is tight, lively, and imaginative. It has been a pleasure to work with her.

Finally, we are extraordinarily grateful to our former students whose papers or paragraphs appear in How to Write Anything. Their writing speaks for itself, but we have been inspired, too, by their personal dedication and character. These are the sort of students who motivate teachers, and so we are very proud to see their work published in How to Write Anything: Alysha Behn, Jordyn Brown, Stefan Casso, Marissa Dahlstrom, Manasi Deshpande, Micah T. Eades, Wade Lamb, Desiree Lopez, Cheryl Lovelady, Shane McNamee, Matthew Nance, Lily Parish, Miles Pequeno, Heidi Rogers, Kanaka Sathasivan, J. Reagan Tankersley, Katelyn Vincent, and Susan Wilcox.

John J. Ruszkiewicz

Jay T. Dolmage

Correlation to the Council of Writing Program Administrators' (WPA) Outcomes Statement

How to Write Anything helps students build proficiency in the five categories of learning that writing programs across the country use to assess their work: rhetorical knowledge; critical thinking, reading, and writing; writing processes; knowledge of conventions; and composing in electronic environments. A detailed correlation follows.

Features of How to Write Anything: A Guide and Reference with Readings, Third Edition, Correlated to the WPA Outcomes Statement

Note: This chart aligns with the latest WPA Outcomes Statement, ratified in July 2014.

WPA Outcomes	Relevant Features of How to Write Anything
Rhetorical Knowledge
Learn and use key rhetorical concepts through analyzing and composing a variety of texts.	Each assignment chapter in the Guide includes three texts in a wide variety of genres. Questions, headnotes, and “Reading the Genre” prompts encourage students to examine and understand the key rhetorical concepts behind each genre of writing. Writing activities and prompts guide students through composing a range of texts. In addition, the Reader includes more than 40 more texts for student analysis.
Gain experience reading and composing in several genres to understand how genre conventions shape and are shaped by readers’ and writers’ practices and purposes.	The Introduction provides a foundation for thinking about genre, while each assignment chapter in the Guide offers a thorough look at each genre’s conventions and how those conventions have developed and changed, as well as how to apply them to students’ own writing situations. Each chapter in the Reader includes a “Genre Moves” feature, which analyzes a classic model to highlight a specific genre convention and suggest ways students might make use of it.
Develop facility in responding to a variety of situations and contexts, calling for purposeful shifts in voice, tone, level of formality, design, medium, and/or structure.	Each assignment chapter in the Guide offers detailed advice on responding to a particular rhetorical situation, from arguing a claim and proposing a solution to writing an e-mail or a résumé. See “Choosing a Style and Design” sections in Part 1 chapters, and the “Getting the Details Right” sections in Part 2 chapters for advice on situation-specific style and design. Part 5 features chapters on “High, Middle, and Low Style” (32); “Inclusive and Culturally Sensitive Style” (33); and “Vigorous, Clear, Economical Style” (34).
Understand and use a variety of technologies to address a range of audiences.	Chapter 48 covers digital media, including blogs, social networks, Web sites, wikis, podcasts, maps, and videos. Chapter 49 covers creating and using visuals to present data and ideas. Each assignment chapter includes at least one visual example of the genre that the chapter focuses on, and several of the reference chapters include Visual Tutorials featuring photographs and illustrations that provide students with step-by-step instructions for challenging topics, such as using the Web to browse for ideas. This emphasis on visuals, media, and design helps students develop visual and technological literacy they can use in their own work. Chapter 13 covers e-mail; Chapters 17 and 18 address portfolio and presentation software; and Chapters 38 and 40 cover finding, evaluating, and using print and electronic resources for research.

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING WITH READINGS

WPA Outcomes	Relevant Features of How to Write Anything
Rhetorical Knowledge (continued)
Match the capacities of different environments (e.g., print and electronic) to varying rhetorical situations.	The text and LaunchPad include a wide range of print and multimodal genres from essays and scholarly articles to photographs, infographics, Web sites, and audio and video presentations. Rhetorical choices that students make in each genre are covered in the Guide chapters and appear in discussions of the writing context and in abundant models in the book.
Critical Thinking, Reading, and Composing
Use composing and reading for inquiry, learning, thinking, and communicating in various rhetorical contexts.	The assignment chapters in the Guide emphasize the connection between reading and writing a particular genre: Each chapter includes model readings with annotations that address the key features of the genre. Each Part 1 chapter shows students the rhetorical choices they need to consider when writing their own papers in these genres and offers assignments to actively engage them in these choices. Chapter 21, “Critical Thinking,” explains rhetorical appeals and logical fallacies. Reference chapters in Parts 3 through 8 cover invention, reading, writing, research, and design strategies that work across all genres.
Read a diverse range of texts, attending especially to relationships between assertion and evidence, to patterns of organization, to interplay between verbal and nonverbal elements, and how these features function for different audiences and situations.	Each assignment chapter in the Guide includes three texts in a wide variety of genres. In addition, the Reader includes more than 40 more texts for student analysis. Each of the Guide chapters also includes sections on understanding audience, creating a structure, finding and developing material (including evidence), and choosing a style and design that best reflect the genre of writing. Chapter 20, “Smart Reading,” helps students read deeply and “against the grain,” while in Chapter 21, “Critical Thinking,” students learn about claims, assumptions, and evidence. Chapter 26, “Organization,” gives advice on devising a structure for a piece of writing.
Locate and evaluate primary and secondary research materials, including journal articles, essays, books, databases, and informal Internet sources.	Part 7 covers research and sources in depth, with chapters on beginning your research, finding print and online sources, doing field research, evaluating and annotating sources, and documenting sources.

WPA Outcomes	Relevant Features of How to Write Anything
Critical Thinking, Reading, and Composing (continued)
Use strategies — such as interpretation, synthesis, response, critique, and design/redesign — to compose texts that integrate the writer's ideas with those from appropriate sources.	Chapters 41 ("Annotating Sources"), 42 ("Paraphrasing Sources"), and 44 ("Incorporating Sources into Your Work") explore a variety of strategies for integrating the writer's ideas with ideas and information from sources. Chapter 12, "Synthesis Papers," shows students how to summarize, compare, and assess the views offered by different sources.
Processes
Develop a writing project through multiple drafts.	Chapter 35, "Revising Your Own Work," discusses the importance of revising and gives detailed advice on how to approach different types of revision. Targeted cross-references throughout the text help students get the revision help they need when they need it.
Develop flexible strategies for reading, drafting, reviewing, collaboration, revising, rewriting, rereading, and editing.	The Reference's brief, targeted chapters and cross-references lend themselves to a flexible approach to writing process, with an array of strategies for students to choose from whether they're crafting an introduction or preparing to revise a first draft. Genre-specific advice in the Guide chapters helps students tailor each step of the writing process to their writing situation, while process-based chapters in the Reference offer guidance that can be applied to any type of writing.
Use composing processes and tools as a means to discover and reconsider ideas.	Each Part 1 chapter includes two sections that encourage students to use the composing process as a means of discovery. "Deciding to write . . ." covers the reasons a writer might choose a specific form of writing, while "Exploring purpose and topic" prompts students to challenge their own ideas about a subject and write to discover what they think when they look more deeply at it.
Experience the collaborative and social aspects of writing processes.	Several chapters in the Reference send students out into their worlds for advice, information, and feedback. Chapter 22, "Experts," talks about the kinds of experts — such as librarians, instructors, peers, and writing center tutors — that students can call on for help. Chapter 39, "Doing Field Research," discusses the whys and hows of interviewing and observing people as part of the research process. Chapter 36, "Peer Editing," offers advice for helping peers improve their work.
Learn to give and act on productive feedback to works in progress.	Chapter 36, "Peer Editing," encourages students to give specific, helpful advice to peers and think about peer editing in the same way they revise their own work.

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING WITH READINGS

WPA Outcomes	Relevant Features of How to Write Anything
Processes (continued)
Adapt composing processes for a variety of technologies and modalities.	Chapter 48 focuses on digital media, including blogs, Web sites, wikis, podcasts, maps, and videos. Chapter 13 covers e-mail; Chapters 17 and 18 address portfolio and presentation software; and Chapters 38 and 40 cover finding, evaluating, and using print and electronic resources for research.
Reflect on the development of composing practices and how those practices influence their work.	The new Introduction invites students to consider their writing practices and how the choices they make during invention, drafting, research, and revision shape their process and their work.
Knowledge of Conventions
Develop knowledge of linguistic structures, including grammar, punctuation, and spelling, through practice in composing and revising.	Part 9 (Common Errors) includes chapters on grammar, punctuation, and mechanics, while Chapters 35 and 36 provide editing and proofreading advice. Targeted cross-references throughout the text send students to these chapters as needed.
Understand why genre conventions for structure, paragraphing, tone, and mechanics vary.	Each Part 1 chapter includes a section on choosing style and design to help students understand how their choice of style, structure, tone, and mechanics is shaped by the genre in which they're writing.
Gain experience negotiating variations in genre conventions.	Models of work from several subgenres within the book's main genres show students the variations that exist within the confines of a given genre. In addition, "Reading the Genre" prompts help students identify and understand the genre conventions at work in each selection.
Learn common formats and/or design features for different kinds of texts.	Each assignment chapter in the Guide covers a format specific to the genre covered there; see "Choosing a Style and Design" in the Part 1 chapters and "Getting the Details Right" in the Part 2 chapters.
Explore the concepts of intellectual property (such as fair use and copyright) that motivate documentation conventions.	Chapter 45, "Documenting Sources," helps students understand why documentation is important and what's at stake in properly identifying and citing material used from sources.
Practice applying citation conventions systematically in their own work.	Chapters 46, "MLA Documentation and Format," and 47, "APA Documentation and Format," include detailed guidance for citing sources according to each style's conventions. Visual Tutorials in each chapter help students identify and find the information they need in order to create accurate citations.

If a blank page or empty screen scares you, join the club. Even professional writers freeze up when facing new and unfamiliar assignments or intimidating audiences. It's only natural for you to wonder how you'll handle all the tasks you face in school or on the job—the reports, evaluations, personal statements, opinion pieces, reviews, and more. Much more. Even writing you do for pleasure has a learning curve.

So how do you get rolling? Exactly the way experienced authors do, by examining the strategies other writers have used to achieve similar goals for demanding audiences. That's not very creative, you might object. But in fact, it's the way inventive people in many fields operate. They get a feel for the shape and features, structures and strategies, materials and styles of whatever they hope to construct themselves, and then they work from that knowledge to fashion new ideas. They become masters of their genre. This book will introduce you to writing by taking exactly the same approach.

Understand Genres of Writing

So what is a genre? An old-school definition might describe it as a variety of writing we recognize by its distinctive purpose and features. For instance, a work that fits into the genre of narrative usually tells a story and emphasizes characterization, dialogue, and descriptions; a report presents reliable facts and information and relies on research and documentation; an argument defends a claim with reasons and evidence and uses lots of powerful language and even, sometimes, pulls at your heartstrings. How To Write Anything introduces you to these three familiar genres, along with five others you'll run up against throughout your academic and professional life: evaluations, causal analyses, proposals, literary analyses, and rhetorical analyses.

But if you are expecting simple formulas, templates, and step-by-step instructions for each category, guess again. No one learns to write by filling in blanks because the processes are too complicated. So this book treats genres far more dynamically—as real-life responses to ever-changing writing situations. You’ll find that genres aren’t arbitrary, inflexible, predictable, or dull. Instead, they change constantly—maybe the better term is evolve—to serve the needs of writers and readers. (Consider how just in the past few years personal and professional letters have metamorphosed into e-mails, text messages, and tweets.)

Though it still makes sense to draw upon patterns and models that work reliably, that’s only half the process of learning to write. First you study what existing genres can teach you (and that’s a lot). Then you bend the genres to fit actual assignments you get and, just as important, the kind of work you’d like to do on your own. You figure out what to say within a genre, tailor those concepts to the people you hope to influence, organize your ideas strategically, and state them powerfully in appropriate media—including visual, oral, and online formats. That’s what Part 1 of How to Write Anything is about. It walks you through the full range of choices you face in making genres work for you—and not the other way around.

It might help to think of genres as shortcuts to success. When you learn a new genre, you don’t necessarily acquire a hard-and-fast set of rules for writing; instead, you gain control over that genre’s possibilities. Who knows where those insights might take you?

Connect Purpose to Subgenres

But let’s step back a moment and think about the “specific assignments” you’ll be facing, especially in school. One of the first matters to settle is always the aim or purpose of a given paper, and it is rarely just to write or even to compose open-ended narratives, reports, or arguments. Instead, you’ll be asked or required to compose projects so narrowly focused that they actually turn broad genres into subgenres. A subgenre is simply a specialized version of a genre, one that adapts its general principles to immediate purposes: For example, you need to tell a good story to talk yourself out of an expensive parking ticket or into an honors program.

To put it more formally, you won't ordinarily compose a nonspecific report; you'll write a history term paper detailing some aspect of the Cuban Missile Crisis or a newspaper column explaining NCAA recruitment policies. You won't do a causal analysis for the exercise; you'll write a topic proposal to determine the feasibility of a thesis idea. You won't argue just for the fun of it; you'll dash off an editorial to persuade student government to fix its election code. In effect, you are encouraged to modify a genre to fit your more immediate needs. And that's a good thing.

Why? Because you can base your work in subgenres on very specific models readily available in print and online—they're materials you read and work with every day. In How to Write Anything, for instance, the chapter on "Evaluations" presents basic strategies for making smart judgments about people and things, explaining in detail how to establish and apply criteria of evaluation and how to present the evidence you collect. Fair enough.

But your purpose in preparing (or even reading) evaluations will often be much more focused. You'll want to know whether a restaurant is worth your dollar, a book is smart and challenging, a school program up-to-snuff academically. So you'll likely consult book, restaurant, or program reviews you've come to regard as trustworthy, probably because of how well they handle criteria of evaluation and evidence. Once you know how a genre works, you'll appreciate how its subgenres refine those moves. Suddenly, your task as a writer is easier because knowing a genre gives you a method and vocabulary for dealing with all its subgenres—and appreciating how they operate.

Subgenres, then, work the same way as genres, presenting an array of specific features and strategies for you to emulate and modify. You'll find connections between genre and subgenres throughout How to Write Anything. Each of the major readings in Part 1 is identified by a subgenre, and all the major writing assignments suggest that you take one of the items as a pattern to help you with a project of your own. Part 2 "Special Assignments" is entirely about subgenres crucial to people in school or entering the job market—items such as essay examinations, résumés, personal statements, and oral reports. In this section, you'll clearly see how practical and action-oriented subgenres can be. At the end of this introduction, you'll find a list of the genres and subgenres covered in How to Write Anything.

Choose Audiences

Remember the claim that genres serve the needs of writers and demanding audiences? It's very important. As an analogy, just consider how much you rely on genres to select what movies you will see: sci-fi films, westerns, action/adventure films, romances (a.k.a. “chick flicks”), horror movies, and so on. You bring expectations to films in these categories based upon your past experiences. You may be satisfied when a movie meets or exceeds your expectations, angry when a work fails to live up to genre standards, and really excited when a flick manages to do something new—stretches a genre the way The Dark Knight or Marvel's The Avengers did.

Readers of your work will react the same way, which is why you'll find sections on “Understanding Your Audience” in each of the genre chapters of How to Write Anything. Audiences you target with a particular genre will bring specific expectations to your work, based on their understanding of your project. For example, a highly academic genre such as a “literary analysis” usually has a narrower and more demanding readership than, let's say, a movie review you post on a blog. You've got to learn how to make genres work for their typical readers—which means understanding them or at least being aware of what they bring to the table when they read.

But as a writer working in genres, you'll also discover you have the power sometimes to define or summon audiences for your work. You might, for example, decide to write a report on bullying aimed at middle-school students; it would differ significantly from a report on the same topic aimed at parents, wouldn't it? Or you might consider how academic readers might be convinced to take a topic such as zombies in films seriously: What features in your text would signal your serious intentions to them? Your analysis of such choices is exactly what makes writing within genres exciting and challenging.

Manage Structure and Style

How to Write Anything gives as much attention to structure and style as to audience in each of the genre chapters—and for good reason. Like the treatment of audience, these elements can make genres seem familiar and comfortable, or they can stretch their boundaries to breaking, depending entirely on choices you make.

Many subgenres, for example, are rigid in their organization: You wouldn't want to experiment with the structure of a lab report or grant application. Nor would you take chances with the formal style expected in these documents. Get a little funky and you've flunked chemistry or lost your funding. Common sense, you say, and you'd be right.

But other genres have lots of give, and so chapters on these genres suggest how that flexibility creates opportunities for innovation and experimentation. For instance, not all narratives have to move in lockstep from beginning to middle to end, but if you are going to tell a story out of sequence or via flashbacks, there are consequences: You might befuddle some readers and push them away. Or think about the range of style you have in narratives—from descriptions that are elegant and formal to dialogue that tells it like it is. You might even use these choices of style to attract readers you want—that is, people who share your values or taste. Even a genre as sober as evaluation has room for enormous range in structure and style—which we signal in this edition by featuring a satire as one of the models.

Develop Writing Processes

For more than a generation now, writing has been taught in schools as a sequential process. You probably learned it that way, working steadily from finding ideas, developing them, writing a first draft, and proofreading a final one. There's nothing wrong with the model, especially the parts that encourage revision. But in working with genres, you'll discover that writing behaviors grow more complicated. Simply put, there are many processes and pathways to successful composing.

Each chapter in Part 1 of How to Write Anything outlines a process for creating a particular genre. Some kinds of writing require intense personal reflection, others send reporters into the field for interviews or into libraries for research, and still others may push you deep inside texts for experiences in close reading. Some genres will develop your skills with media or make you examine the clarity of charts and graphs. Others will have you playing with and repeatedly refining your choice of words.

Because of these individual demands, you'll discover that all the genre chapters in the Guide section of How to Write Anything (Parts 1–2) are strategically cross-referenced to supplemental materials in what's called the "Reference" section (Parts 3–9). The reference chapters are designed to support your specific needs as a writer, whatever the genre you might be exploring. If you have a problem with writer's block, you will find detailed advice to get you moving. If a genre assignment pushes you to a library catalog, a reference chapter will explain the tools and resources you'll find there and offer sensible strategies. If you have to document a paper or you've forgotten how to get pronouns to agree with fussy antecedents, you have a place to go. It's worth noting that the reference chapters are, for the most part, written in the same informal style as the rest of the book. So don't ignore them. You might even find stuff there to write about.

Invitation to Write

How to Write Anything was designed and edited to be compact and efficient. But you'll find that it has a personal voice, frank and occasionally humorous. Why? Because yet another textbook lacking style or character probably won't convince you that your own prose should speak to real audiences. And if some chapters operate like reference materials, they still aren't written coldly or dispassionately—not even the section on Common Errors.

If How to Write Anything seems like an oddly ambitious title, maybe it's because learning to write should be a heady enterprise, undertaken with confidence and optimism. Give it a try.

Genres and Subgenres in How to Write Anything

Narratives

- Literacy narrative
- Memoir/reflection
- Graphic narrative
- Personal statement

Reports

- Research report
- Feature story
- Infographic
- Essay examination
- Annotated bibliography
- Synthesis paper
- E-mail
- Business letter
- Résumé
- Oral report

Arguments

- Support of a thesis
- Refutation
- Visual argument
- Position paper

Evaluations

- Arts review
- Satire
- Product review
- Parody
- Portfolio review
- Peer review

Causal Analyses

- Causal argument
- Research analysis
- Cultural analysis

Proposals

- Trial balloon
- Manifesto
- Visual proposal
- Topic proposal

Literary Analysis

- Thematic analysis
- Close reading
- Photographs as literary texts

Rhetorical Analysis

- Rhetorical analysis
- Close analysis of an argument
- Film analysis

this page left intentionally blank

Contents

Preface v

Introduction xix

guide

Part 1 Genres 2

1 Narratives 4

Deciding to write a narrative 5

Tell a story 5

Introduce characters 5

Make a point — usually 6

Report details 6

LITERACY NARRATIVE: Allegra Goodman, O.K., You're Not Shakespeare. Now Get Back to Work 7

Exploring purpose and topic 10

Brainstorm, freewrite, build lists, and use memory prompts 10

Choose a manageable subject 10

Understanding your audience 11

Focus on people 11

Select events that will keep readers engaged 12

Pace the story 12

Adjust your writing to appeal to the intended readers 12

Finding and developing materials 13

Consult documents 13

Consult images 13

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING WITH READINGS

Talk to the people involved	13
Trust your experiences	13
Creating a structure	15
Consider a simple sequence	15
Build toward a climax	15
Choosing a style and design	16
Don't hesitate to use first person — I	16
Use figures of speech such as similes, metaphors, and analogies to make memorable comparisons	17
In choosing verbs, favor active rather than passive voice	17
Keep the language simple	18
Develop major characters through action and dialogue	18
Develop the setting to set the context and mood	20
Use images to tell a story	20
Examining models	21
MEMOIR/REFLECTION: Miles Pequeno, Check. Mate?	21
GRAPHIC NARRATIVE (EXCERPT): Marjane Satrapi, From Persepolis	27
 E-readings > Katerina Cizek, Out My Window [MULTIMEDIA DOCUMENTARY]
ASSIGNMENTS	35

2

Reports 36

Deciding to write a report	37
Present information	38
Find reliable sources	38
Aim for objectivity	38
Present information clearly	38
RESEARCH REPORT: Susan Wilcox, Marathons for Women	39
Exploring purpose and topic	47
Answer questions	47
Review what is already known about a subject	47
Report new knowledge	48
Understanding your audience	49
Suppose you are the expert	49
Suppose you are the novice	49
Suppose you are the peer	49

- Finding and developing materials 50
 - Base reports on the best available sources 50
 - Base reports on multiple sources 50
 - Fact-check your report 51
 - Creating a structure 52
 - Organize by date, time, or sequence 52
 - Organize by magnitude or order of importance 52
 - Organize by division 53
 - Organize by classification 53
 - Organize by position, location, or space 53
 - Organize by definition 55
 - Organize by comparison/contrast 55
 - Organize by thesis statement 56
 - Choosing a style and design 57
 - Present the facts cleanly 57
 - Keep out of it 57
 - Avoid connotative language 57
 - Pay attention to elements of design 58
 - Examining models 59
 - FEATURE STORY: Lev Grossman, From Scroll to Screen 59
 - INFOGRAPHIC: The White House, Wind Technologies Market Report 2012 63
 -  E-readings > UNICEF, Innovations for Child Health in Uganda
[VIDEO REPORT]
 - ASSIGNMENTS 65
- 3 Arguments 66
- Deciding to write an argument 67
 - Offer levelheaded and disputable claims 67
 - Offer good reasons to support a claim 68
 - Understand opposing claims and points of view 68
 - Frame arguments powerfully — and not in words only 68
 - ARGUMENT TO ADVANCE A THESIS: Stefan Casso, Worth the Lie 70
 - Exploring purpose and topic 77
 - Learn much more about your subject 77
 - State a preliminary claim, if only for yourself 77

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING WITH READINGS

- Qualify your claim to make it reasonable 78
- Examine your core assumptions 78
- Understanding your audience 80
 - Consider and control your ethos 80
 - Consider self-imposed limits 81
 - Consider the worlds of your readers 81
- Finding and developing materials 83
 - List your reasons 83
 - Assemble your hard evidence 83
 - Cull the best quotations 84
 - Find counterarguments 84
 - Consider emotional appeals 85
- Creating a structure 86
 - Make a point or build toward one 86
 - Spell out what's at stake 86
 - Address counterpoints when necessary, not in a separate section 87
 - Save your best arguments for the end 87
- Choosing a style and design 88
 - Invite readers with a strong opening 88
 - Write vibrant sentences 89
 - Ask rhetorical questions 90
 - Use images and design to make a point 90
- Examining models 92
 - REFUTATION ARGUMENT: Bjørn Lomborg, The Limits to Panic 92
 - VISUAL ARGUMENT: Matt Bors, Can We Stop Worrying about Millennials Yet? 95
 -  E-readings > 5 Gyres, Understanding Plastic Pollution through Exploration, Education, and Action [INTERACTIVE WEB SITE]
- ASSIGNMENTS 99

4

Evaluations 100

- Deciding to write an evaluation 101
 - Explain your mission 101
 - Establish and defend criteria 102
 - Offer convincing evidence 102
 - Offer worthwhile advice 102

ARTS REVIEW: Lisa Schwarzbaum, The Hunger Games	103
Exploring purpose and topic	106
Evaluate a subject you know well	106
Evaluate a subject you need to investigate	106
Evaluate a subject you'd like to know more about	106
Evaluate a subject that's been on your mind	106
Understanding your audience	107
Write for experts	107
Write for a general audience	107
Write for novices	108
Finding and developing materials	109
Decide on your criteria	109
Look for hard criteria	109
Argue for criteria that can't be measured	110
Stand by your values	111
Gather your evidence	111
Creating a structure	112
Choose a simple structure when your criteria and categories are predictable	112
Choose a focal point	113
Compare and contrast	113
Choosing a style and design	115
Use a high or formal style	115
Use a middle style	115
Use a low style	116
Present evaluations visually	116
Examining models	118
SOCIAL SATIRE: Jordyn Brown, A Word from My Anti-Phone Soapbox	118
PRODUCT REVIEW: Eric Hoover, Monsters U.'s Site Just Might Give You "Web-Site Envy"	122
VISUAL COMPARISON: Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, Crash Test	125
 E-readings > Ivan Penn and the Tampa Bay Times , Mandarin Chinese, Rosetta Stone Style [PRODUCT TEST]
ASSIGNMENTS	127

5

Causal Analyses 128

Deciding to write a causal analysis 129

Don't jump to conclusions 129

Appreciate your limits 129

Offer sufficient evidence for claims 131

CAUSAL ANALYSIS: Jonah Goldberg, Global Warming and the Sun 132

Exploring purpose and topic 135

Look again at a subject you know well 136

Look for an issue new to you 136

Examine a local issue 136

Choose a challenging subject 136

Tackle an issue that seems settled 137

Understanding your audience 138

Create an audience 138

Write to an existing audience 138

Finding and developing materials 140

Understand necessary causes 140

Understand sufficient causes 140

Understand precipitating causes 140

Understand proximate causes 141

Understand remote causes 141

Understand reciprocal causes 141

Creating a structure 142

Explain why something happened 142

Explain the consequences of a phenomenon 143

Suggest an alternative view of cause and effect 143

Explain a chain of causes 144

Choosing a style and design 145

Consider a middle style 145

Adapt the style to the subject matter 145

Use appropriate supporting media 146

Examining models 147

RESEARCH STUDY: Alysha Behn, Where Have All the Women Gone? 147

CULTURAL ANALYSIS: Lance Hosey, Why We Love Beautiful Things 155

 E-readings > TheAtlantic.com, Think Again [MULTIMODAL PROJECT]

ASSIGNMENTS 159

6

Proposals 160

Deciding to write a proposal 161

Define a problem 162

Make specific recommendations 162

Target the proposal 162

Consider reasonable alternatives 162

Make realistic recommendations 162

TRIAL BALLOON: Barrett Seaman, How Bingeing Became the New College Sport 163

Exploring purpose and topic 166

Look for a genuine issue 166

Look for a challenging problem 166

Look for a soluble problem 166

Look for a local issue 166

Understanding your audience 168

Appeal to people who can make a difference 168

Rally people who represent public opinion 168

Finding and developing materials 170

Define the problem 170

Examine prior solutions 170

Outline a proposal 170

Defend the proposal 171

Figure out how to implement the proposal 171

Creating a structure 172

Choosing a style and design 173

Use a formal style 173

Use a middle style, when appropriate 173

Pay attention to elements of design 174

Examining models 175

MANIFESTO: Katelyn Vincent, Technology Time-Out 175

VISUAL PROPOSAL: Jen Sorensen, Loan Bone 182

 E-readings > Michael Pollan, Celebrate School Lunch [VIDEO]

ASSIGNMENTS 183

7Literary Analyses 184

Deciding to write a literary analysis 185

Begin with a close reading 186

Make a claim or an observation 186

Use texts for evidence 186

Present works in context 186

Draw on previous research 186

THEMATIC INTERPRETATION: William Deresiewicz, Great Expectations: What Gatsby's Really Looking For 187

Exploring purpose and topic 190

Choose a text you connect with 190

Choose a text you want to learn more about 190

Choose a text you don't understand 190

Understanding your audience 192

Clearly identify the author and works you are analyzing 192

Define key terms 192

Don't aim to please professional critics 193

Finding and developing materials 194

Examine the text closely 195

Focus on the text itself 195

Focus on meanings, themes, and interpretations 195

Focus on authorship and history 195

Focus on genre 196

Focus on influences 196

Focus on social connections 197

Find good sources 197

Creating a structure 200

Imagine a structure 200

Work on your opening 201

Choosing a style and design 202

Use a formal style for most assignments 202

Use a middle style for informal or personal papers 203

Follow the conventions of literary analysis 203

Cite plays correctly 204

Explore alternative media 204

Examining models 205

CLOSE READING: Emily Dickinson, I felt a Funeral, in my Brain 205

Kanaka Sathasivan, Insanity: Two Women 206

PHOTOGRAPHS AS LITERARY TEXTS: Dorothea Lange, Jobless on Edge of Pea Field, Imperial Valley, California 213

Walker Evans, Burroughs Family Cabin, Hale County, Alabama 215

Gordon Parks, American Gothic 216

 E-readings > Erik Didriksen, Pop Sonnet: Royals
[PARODY]

ASSIGNMENTS 217

8

Rhetorical Analyses 218

Deciding to write a rhetorical analysis 219

Take words and images seriously 220

Spend time with texts 220

Pay attention to audience 220

Mine texts for evidence 220

RHETORICAL ANALYSIS: Paula Marantz Cohen, Too Much Information: The Pleasure of Figuring Things Out for Yourself 221

Exploring purpose and topic 224

Make a difference 224

Choose a text you can work with 224

Choose a text you can learn more about 224

Choose a text with handles 224

Choose a text you know how to analyze 225

Understanding your audience 226

Finding and developing materials 227

Consider the ethos of the author 227

Consider how a writer plays to emotions 228

Consider how well reasoned a piece is 228

Creating a structure 230

HOW TO WRITE ANYTHING WITH READINGS

Choosing a style and design 231

 Consider a high style 231

 Consider a middle style 231

 Make the text accessible to readers 231

Examining models 232

ANALYSIS OF AN ARGUMENT: Matthew James Nance, A Mockery of Justice 232

CULTURAL ANALYSIS: J. Reagan Tankersley, Humankind's Ouroboros 238

e E-readings > Nickolay Lamm, The History of Music [INFOGRAPHIC]

ASSIGNMENTS 249

Part 2 Special Assignments 250

9

Essay Examinations 252

Understanding essay exams 253

 Anticipate the types of questions to be asked 253

 Read exam questions carefully 253

 Sketch out a plan for your essay(s) 253

 Organize your answers strategically 253

 Offer strong evidence for your claims 254

 Come to a conclusion 254

 Keep the tone serious 254

 Keep your eye on the clock 254

Getting the details right 255

 Use transitional words and phrases 255

 Do a quick check of grammar, mechanics, and spelling 255

 Write legibly or print 255

Examining a model 256

Wade Lamb, Plato's Phaedrus 256

10

Position Papers 258

Understanding position papers 259

 Read the assignment carefully 260

- Review the assigned material 260
- Mine the texts for evidence 260
- Organize the paper sensibly 260
- Getting the details right 261
 - Identify key terms and concepts and use them correctly and often 261
 - Treat your sources appropriately 261
 - Spell names and concepts correctly 261
 - Respond to your classmates' work 261
- Examining a model 262
 - Heidi Rogers, Triumph of the Lens 262

11Annotated Bibliographies 266

- Understanding annotated bibliographies 267
 - Begin with an accurate record of research materials 267
 - Describe or summarize the content of each item in the bibliography 267
 - Assess the significance or quality of the work 268
 - Explain the role the work plays in your research 268
- Getting the details right 269
 - Record the information on your sources accurately 269
 - Follow a single documentation style 269
 - Keep summaries and assessments brief 269
 - Follow directions carefully 269
- Examining a model 270
 - Annotated Bibliography from a Topic Proposal (Excerpt)* 270

12Synthesis Papers 272

- Understanding synthesis papers 273
 - Identify reputable sources on your subject 273
 - Summarize and paraphrase the works you have identified 273
 - Look for connections between your sources 274
 - Acknowledge disagreements and rebuttals 274
 - Don't rush to judgment 274
 - Cite materials that both support and challenge your own thesis 274
- Getting the details right 275
 - Provide a context for your topic 275
 - Tell a story 275

Pay attention to language 275
Be sure to document your sources 275

Examining a model 276

Lauren Chiu, Time to Adapt? 279

13E-mails 282

Understanding e-mail 283

Explain your purpose clearly and logically 283

Tell readers what you want them to do 283

Write for intended and unintended audiences 283

Keep your messages brief 283

Distribute your messages sensibly 284

Getting the details right 285

Choose a sensible subject line 285

Arrange your text sensibly 285

Check the recipient list before you hit send 285

Include an appropriate signature 285

Use standard grammar 286

Have a sensible e-mail address 286

Don't be a pain 286

Examining a model 287

Kori Strickland, Writing Center Course Eligibility 287

14Business Letters 288

Understanding business letters 289

Explain your purpose clearly and logically 289

Tell readers what you want them to do 289

Write for your audience 289

Keep the letter focused and brief 290

Follow a conventional form 290

Getting the details right 291

Use consistent margins and spacing 291

Finesse the greeting 291

Distribute copies of your letter sensibly 291

Spell everything right 291

- Photocopy the letter as a record 292
- Don't forget the promised enclosures 292
- Fold the letter correctly and send it in a suitable envelope 292

Examining models 293

John Humbert, Complaint Letter 293

Nancy Linn, Cover Letter 294

15

Résumés 296

Understanding résumés 297

Gather the necessary information 298

Decide on appropriate categories 298

Arrange the information within categories in reverse chronological order 299

Design pages that are easy to read 299

Getting the details right 300

Proofread every line in the résumé several times 300

Don't leave unexplained gaps in your education or work career 300

Be consistent 300

Protect your personal data 300

Look for help 300

Examining a model 301

Andrea Palladino, Résumé 301

16

Personal Statements 304

Understanding personal statements 305

Read the essay prompt carefully 306

Decide on a focus or theme 306

Be realistic about your audience 307

Organize the piece strategically 307

Try a high or middle style 307

Getting the details right 308

Don't get too artsy 308

Use common sense 308

Compose the statement yourself 308

Examining a model 309

Michael Villaverde, *Application Essay for Academic Service Partnership
Foundation Internship* 309

17

Writing Portfolios 312

Understanding writing portfolios 313

Take charge of the portfolio assignment 314

Appreciate the audiences for a portfolio 315

Present authentic materials 315

Take reflections seriously 316

Getting the details right 318

Polish your portfolio 318

Understand the portfolio activities 318

Give honest feedback to classmates 318

Take advantage of multimedia 319

Examining a model 320

Desiree Lopez, Midterm Reflection on an Internship Course 320

18

Oral Reports 322

Understanding oral reports 323

Know your stuff 323

Organize your presentation 323

Keep your audience on track 324

Stay connected to your listeners 324

Use your voice and body 324

Adapt your material to the time available 325

Practice your talk 325

Prepare for the occasion 325

Getting the details right 327

Be certain you need presentation software 327

Use slides to introduce points, not cover them 327

Use a simple and consistent design 327

Consider alternatives to slide-based presentations 328

Examining a model 329

Terri Sagastume, Presentation on Edenlawn Estates 329

reference

Part 3 Ideas 332

19 Brainstorming 334

- Find routines that support thinking 334
- Build from lists 335
- Map your ideas 335
- Try freewriting 336
- Use memory prompts 336
- Search online for your ideas 337
- VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Browse for Ideas 338

20 Smart Reading 340

- Read to deepen what you already know 341
- Read above your level of knowledge 341
- Read what makes you uncomfortable 341
- Read against the grain 341
- Read slowly 342
- Annotate what you read 342

21 Critical Thinking 343

- Think in terms of claims and reasons 343
- Think in terms of premises and assumptions 344
- Think in terms of evidence 345
- Anticipate objections 345
- Avoid logical fallacies 345

22 Experts 350

Talk with your instructor 350

Take your ideas to the writing center 350

Find local experts 351

Check with librarians 351

Chat with peers 351

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Use the Writing Center 354

23 Writer's Block 356

Break the project into parts 357

Set manageable goals 357

Create a calendar 358

Limit distractions 358

Do the parts you like first 358

Write a zero draft 358

Reward yourself 359

Part 4 Shaping & Drafting 36024 Thesis 362

Compose a complete sentence 362

Make a significant claim or assertion 362

Write a declarative sentence, not a question 363

Expect your thesis to mature 363

Introduce a thesis early in a project 363

Or state a thesis late in a project 364

Write a thesis to fit your audience and purpose 365

25 Strategies 367

Use description to set a scene 367

Use division to divide a subject 369

Use classification to sort objects or ideas by consistent principles 370

Use definition to clarify meaning 370

Use comparison and contrast to show similarity and difference 371

26 Organization 374

Examine model documents 374

Sketch out a plan or sequence 374

Provide cues or signals for readers 375

Deliver on your commitments 376

27 Outlines 377

Start with scratch outlines 377

List key ideas 378

Look for relationships 379

Subordinate ideas 380

Decide on a sequence 380

Move up to a formal outline 382

28 Paragraphs 383

Make sure paragraphs lead somewhere 383

Develop ideas adequately 384

Organize paragraphs logically 384

Use paragraphs to manage transitions 386

Design paragraphs for readability 386

29 Transitions 387

Use appropriate transitional words and phrases 388

Use the right word or phrase to show time or sequence 388

Use sentence structure to connect ideas 388

Pay attention to nouns and pronouns 389

Use synonyms 389

- Use physical devices for transitions 390
- Read a draft aloud to locate weak transitions 390

30 Introductions and Conclusions 391

- Shape an introduction 391
- Draw a conclusion 393

31 Titles 395

- Use titles to focus documents 395
- Create searchable titles 396
- Avoid whimsical or suggestive titles 396
- Capitalize and punctuate titles carefully 397

Part 5 Style 398

32 High, Middle, and Low Style 400

- Use high style for formal, scientific, and scholarly writing 401
- Use middle style for personal, argumentative, and some academic writing 402
- Use a low style for personal, informal, and even playful writing 405

33 Inclusive and Culturally Sensitive Style 408

- Avoid expressions that stereotype genders or sexual orientation 408
- Avoid expressions that stereotype races, ethnic groups, or religious groups 409
- Treat all people with respect 410
- Avoid sensational language 410

34 Vigorous, Clear, Economical Style 412

- Build sentences around specific and tangible subjects and objects 412
- Look for opportunities to use specific nouns and noun phrases rather than general ones 413

- Avoid sprawling phrases 413
- Avoid sentences with long windups 414
- Favor simple, active verbs 414
- Avoid strings of prepositional phrases 415
- Don't repeat key words close together 415
- Avoid doublings 416
- Turn clauses into more direct modifiers 416
- Cut introductory expressions such as it is and there is/are when you can 417
- Vary your sentence lengths and structures 418
- Read what you have written aloud 418
- Cut a first draft by 25 percent—or more 418

Part 6 Revising & Editing 420

35 Revising Your Own Work 422

- Revise to see the big picture 423
- Edit to make the paper flow 423
- Edit to get the details right 424
- VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Revise Your Work 426

36 Peer Editing 428

- Peer edit the same way you revise your own work 429
- Be specific in identifying problems or opportunities 429
- Offer suggestions for improvement 429
- Praise what is genuinely good in the paper 430
- Use proofreading symbols 430
- Keep comments tactful 431
- VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Insert a Comment in a Word Document 432

Part 7 Research & Sources 43437 Beginning Your Research 436

- Know your assignment 436
- Come up with a plan 436
- Find a manageable topic 437
- Ask for help 438
- Distinguish between primary and secondary sources 438
- Record every source you examine 439
- Prepare a topic proposal 440

38 Finding Print and Online Sources 442

- Search libraries strategically 442
- Explore library reference tools 443
- Use professional databases 444
- Explore the Internet 444

39 Doing Field Research 447

- Interview people with unique knowledge of your subject 448
- Make careful and verifiable observations 449
- Learn more about fieldwork 450

40 Evaluating Sources 451

- Preview source materials for their key features and strategies 451
- Check who published or produced the source 452
- Check who wrote a work 452
- Consider the audience for a source 452
- Establish how current a source is 453
- Check the source's documentation 453

41 Annotating Sources 456

- Annotate sources to understand them 456
- Read sources to identify claims 456
- Read sources to understand assumptions 456
- Read sources to find evidence 457
- Record your personal reactions to source material 457

42 Summarizing Sources 460

- Prepare a summary for every item you examine in a project 460
- Use a summary to recap what a writer has said 460
- Be sure your summary is accurate and complete 461
- Use a summary to record your take on a source 461
- Use summaries to prepare an annotated bibliography 462

43 Paraphrasing Sources 463

- Identify the major claims and the structure of the source 463
- Track the source faithfully 463
- Record key pieces of evidence 464
- Be certain your notes are entirely in your own words 464
- Avoid misleading or inaccurate paraphrasing 464
- Use your paraphrases to synthesize sources 465

44 Incorporating Sources into Your Work 466

- Cue the reader in some way whenever you introduce borrowed material 466
- Select an appropriate “verb of attribution” to frame borrowed material 467
- Use ellipsis marks [. . .] to shorten a lengthy quotation 468
- Use brackets [] to insert explanatory material into a quotation 468
- Use ellipsis marks, brackets, and other devices to make quoted materials fit the grammar of your sentences 469
- Use [sic] to signal an obvious error in quoted material 469

45 Documenting Sources 470

Understand the point of documentation 470

Understand what you accomplish through documentation 470

46 MLA Documentation and Format 472

Document sources according to convention 472

MLA in-text citation 474

MLA works cited entries 482

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Book (MLA) 486

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Magazine (MLA) 492

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Web Site (MLA) 496

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Database (MLA) 498

Sample MLA pages 508

47 APA Documentation and Format 512

Document sources according to convention 512

APA in-text citation 515

APA reference entries 522

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Web Site (APA) 530

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Cite from a Database (APA) 532

Sample APA pages 537

Part 8 Media & Design 54048 Understanding Digital Media 542

Choose a media format based on what you hope to accomplish 543

Use social networks and blogs to create communities 544

Create Web sites to share information 544

Use wikis to collaborate with others 545

Make videos and podcasts to share information 545

Use maps to position ideas 547

Use appropriate digital formats 547

Edit and save digital elements 549

Respect copyrights 549

49 Tables, Graphs, and Infographics 550

Use tables to present statistical data 551

Use line graphs to display changes or trends 551

Use bar and column graphs to plot relationships within sets of data 553

Use pie charts to display proportions 554

Explore the possibilities of infographics 555

50 Designing Print and Online Documents 557

Understand the power of images 557

VISUAL TUTORIAL: How to Insert an Image into a Word Document 558

Keep page designs simple and uncluttered 560

Keep the design logical and consistent 561

Keep the design balanced 563

Use templates sensibly 563

Coordinate your colors 564

Use headings if needed 564

Choose appropriate fonts 564

Part 9 Common Errors 566

51 Capitalization 568

Capitalize the names of ethnic, religious, and political groups 568

Capitalize modifiers formed from proper nouns 568

Capitalize all words in titles except prepositions, articles, or conjunctions 569

Take care with compass points, directions, and specific geographical areas 570

Understand academic conventions 570

Capitalize months, days, holidays, and historical periods 570

52 Apostrophes 571

Use apostrophes to form the possessive 571

Use apostrophes in contractions 572

Don't use apostrophes with possessive pronouns 572

53 Commas 573

Use a comma and a coordinating conjunction to join two independent clauses 573

Use a comma after an introductory word group 573

Use commas with common connective words and phrases 574

Put commas around nonrestrictive (that is, nonessential) elements 575

Use commas to separate items in a series 575

Do not use commas to separate compound verbs 575

Do not use a comma between subject and verb 575

Do not use commas to set off restrictive elements 576

54 Comma Splices, Run-Ons, and Fragments 577

Identify comma splices and run-ons 577

Fix comma splices and run-ons 578

Identify sentence fragments 579

Fix sentence fragments in your work 579

Watch for fragments in the following situations 580

Use deliberate fragments only in appropriate situations 580

55 Subject/Verb Agreement 581

Be sure the verb agrees with its real subject 581

In most cases, treat multiple subjects joined by and as plural 582

When compound subjects are linked by either . . . or or neither . . . nor, make the verb agree with the nearer part of the subject 582

Confirm whether an indefinite pronoun is singular, plural, or variable 583

Be consistent with collective nouns 584

56 Irregular Verbs 585

57 Pronoun/Antecedent Agreement 587

Check the number of indefinite pronouns 588

Correct sexist pronoun usage 588

Treat collective nouns consistently 588

58 Pronoun Reference 589

Clarify confusing pronoun antecedents 589

Make sure a pronoun has a plausible antecedent 590

Be certain that the antecedent of this, that, or which isn't vague 590

59 Pronoun Case 591

Use the subjective case for pronouns that are subjects 592

Use the objective case for pronouns that are objects 592

Use whom when appropriate 592

Finish comparisons to determine the right case 593

Don't be misled by an appositive 593

60 Misplaced and Dangling Modifiers 595

Position modifiers close to the words they modify 595

Place adverbs such as only, almost, especially, and even carefully 595

Don't allow a modifier to dangle 596

61 Parallelism 597

When possible, make compound items parallel 597

Keep items in a series parallel 598

Keep headings and lists parallel 598

reader

Part 10 Readings 600

62 Narratives: Readings 602

Genre Moves: Amy Tan, From Mother Tongue

[LITERACY NARRATIVE] 603

NARRATIVE: Patton Oswalt, Zombie Spaceship Wasteland 605

GRAPHIC NARRATIVE (EXCERPT): Lynda Barry, Lost and Found 614

REFLECTION: Naomi Shihab Nye, Mint Snowball 621

MEMOIR: Ira Sukrungruang, Chop Suey 624

LITERACY NARRATIVE: Jonathan Franzen, The Comfort Zone 628

63 Reports: Readings 646

Genre Moves: N. Scott Momaday, From The Way to Rainy Mountain [DESCRIPTIVE REPORT] 647

INFORMATIONAL REPORT: Kamakshi Ayyar, Cosmic Postcards: The Adventures of an Armchair Astronaut 649

DEFINITIONAL REPORT: Steve Silberman, Neurodiversity Rewires Conventional Thinking about Brains 659

INFORMATIONAL REPORT: Ross Perlin, Down and Out in the Magic Kingdom 662

LEGAL REPORT: Philip Deloria, The Cherokee Nation Decision 675

GRAPHIC REPORT: Mark Graham and Stefano De Sabbata, Age of Internet Empires 684

64 Arguments: Readings 689

Genre Moves: Sojourner Truth, From Ain't I a Woman? [ARGUMENTATIVE SPEECH] 690

EDITORIAL: Maureen Dowd, Don't Send in the Clones 691

ARGUMENTATIVE REPORT: Jeff Wise, The Sad Science of Hipsterism: The Psychology of Indie Bands, PBR, and Weird Facial Hair 695

ARGUMENT FOR CHANGE: Emily Bazelon, Hitting Bottom: Why America Should Outlaw Spanking 699

ANALYSIS OF CULTURAL VALUES: Poranee Natadecha-Sponsel, The Young, the Rich, and the Famous: Individualism as an American Cultural Value 704

POLICY ARGUMENT: Daniel Engber, Glutton Intolerance 714

65 Evaluations: Readings 720

Genre Moves: Naomi Klein, From No Logo [EVALUATION] 721

TELEVISION REVIEW: Emily Nussbaum, To Stir, with Love 723

SCIENTIFIC EVALUATION: Michio Kaku, Force Fields 728

MUSIC REVIEW: Sasha Frere-Jones, The Next Day 742

TELEVISION REVIEW: Nelle Engoron, Why Mad Men Is Bad for Women 745

MEDIA EVALUATION: Leigh Alexander, Domino's, the Pizza That Never Sleeps 752

66 Causal Analyses: Readings 759

Genre Moves: James Baldwin, From If Black English Isn't a Language, Then Tell Me, What Is? [CAUSAL ANALYSIS] 760

CAUSAL ANALYSIS: Rita J. King, How Twitter Is Reshaping the Future of Storytelling 762

CULTURAL ANALYSIS: Natalie Angier, Almost Before We Spoke, We Swore 767

CAUSAL ANALYSIS: Robert W. Gehl, A History of Like 774

EXPLORATORY ESSAY: Tricia Rose, Hip Hop Causes Violence 780

67 Proposals: Readings 809

Genre Moves: Rachel Carson, From The Obligation to Endure [PROPOSAL] 810

PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE: Michael Todd, Is That Plastic in Your Trash a Hazard? 812

PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE: Jane McGonigal, Video Games: An Hour a Day Is Key to Success in Life 818

PROPOSAL: Neil deGrasse Tyson, The Cosmic Perspective 822

SATIRICAL PROPOSAL: Kembreu McLeod, A Modest Free Market Proposal for Education Reform 830

PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE: Peter Singer, “One Person, One Share” of the Atmosphere 835

68 Literary Analyses: Readings 840

Genre Moves: Gloria Naylor, From The Meanings of a Word
[LITERARY ANALYSIS] 841

FORMAL ANALYSIS: Adam Bradley, Rap Poetry 101 843

TEXTUAL ANALYSIS: Zadie Smith, Their Eyes Were Watching God: What Does Soulful Mean? 856

TEXTUAL ANALYSIS:

Joni Mitchell, “Woodstock” (SONG LYRICS) 868

Camille Paglia, “Woodstock” 870

HISTORICAL ANALYSIS: Sara Buttsworth, CinderBella: Twilight, Fairy Tales, and the Twenty-First-Century American Dream 878

CULTURAL ANALYSIS: Gish Jen, Holden Raises Hell 904

69 Rhetorical Analyses: Readings 912

Genre Moves: Susan Sontag, From Notes on “Camp”
[RHETORICAL ANALYSIS] 913

DISCOURSE ANALYSIS: Deborah Tannen, Oh, Mom. Oh, Honey.: Why Do You Have to Say That? 915

ANALYSIS OF AN ADVERTISEMENT: Stanley Fish, The Other Car 921

CULTURAL ANALYSIS: Laurie Fendrich, The Beauty of the Platitude 925

FILM ANALYSIS: Daniel D’Addario, Johnny Depp’s Tonto Misstep: Race and The Lone Ranger 928

ANALYSIS OF AN ADVERTISEMENT: Caroline Leader, Dudes Come Clean: Negotiating a Space for Men in Household Cleaner Commercials 933

Index I-1

guide

Genres

part one chronicle events in people's lives

1

Narratives 4

provide readers with reliable information

2

Reports 36

ask readers to consider debatable ideas

3

Arguments 66

make a claim about the merit of something

4

Evaluations 100

explain how, why, or what if something happens

5

Causal Analyses 128

define a problem and suggest a solution

6

Proposals 160

respond critically to cultural works

7

Literary Analyses 184

examine in detail the way texts work

8

Rhetorical Analyses 218

Need a form you don't see here? Try "Special Assignments," p. 250.

How to start

- Need a topic? See page 10.
- Need to choose the right details? See page 13.
- Need to organize the events in your story? See page 15.

1 chronicle events in people's lives

Narratives

Chances are you've shared bits and pieces of your life story in writing many times. In doing so, you've written personal narratives. Personal does not mean that writers of personal narratives are always baring their souls. Instead, it suggests that they are telling stories from an individual perspective, providing details only they could know and insights only they could have.

LITERACY NARRATIVE

To work at the campus writing center, you need to submit a literacy narrative detailing your own experiences with writing and language.

MEMOIR/ REFLECTION

You direct your grandparents to a community group that is collecting memoirs from local citizens who entered the United States as immigrants.

GRAPHIC NARRATIVE

You want more people to think about bicycling to work, so you create a visual narrative about your experiences as an urban cyclist, posting both photographs and videos on a blog.

DECIDING TO WRITE A NARRATIVE. Narratives describe events that people want to share with readers in words or through other media, including photographs, film, songs, cartoons, and more (see the Introduction for more on choosing a genre). These stories may be about family or work experiences, growing up, personal tragedies, relationships, and so on. Expect a narrative you compose to do the following.

Tell a story. In a narrative, something usually happens. Maybe all you do is reflect on a moment when something peculiar caught your attention. Or your story could recount a series of events — the classic road-trip script. Or you might spin a tale complicated enough to resemble a movie plot, with a connected beginning, middle, and end. But your job is always to focus on some action. Otherwise you are rambling.

Introduce characters. They may be people or animals or animate objects, but a story usually needs someone or something for readers to care about. You needn't pile on physical descriptions or build elaborate backstories. But you ordinarily need characters with names and interesting relationships who speak believable dialogue. Sometimes that fascinating person is you.

Telling stories — sometimes competitively — in clubs and restaurants has become a form of entertainment in cities across the United States. Marvin Joseph/ The Washington Post via Getty Images.

Make a point — usually. There's usually a reason for writing a narrative. When an insurance agent asks about your recent fender bender, she expects you to explain what happened and how you are involved. Most narratives, however, will be less clinical and more reflective, enabling you to connect with readers creatively — to amuse, enlighten, and, perhaps, even to change them. ○ Some narratives are therapeutic too, helping you confront personal issues or get a weight off your chest.

Report details. What brings a narrative to life are its details — the colors, shapes, sounds, textures, and other physical impressions that convince people a story is credible and authentic. They prove that you were close enough to an experience to have an insider's perspective and that the story really belongs to you. Don't fall back on clichés.

Literacy Narrative

A noteworthy subgenre of narratives explores the processes by which people learn to read or write or acquire other life-changing intellectual skills. In the following selection from a slightly longer piece originally published in the New York Times “Writers on Writing” series, contemporary novelist Allegra Goodman reflects on how she learned to overcome the doubts that plague many writers. Her most recent work is The Cookbook Collector (2010).

Reading the Genre

As you read the selection, pay attention to the way Goodman uses pronouns, especially I/me and you/your. To whom is the essay directed? Are there places where Goodman seems to be talking as much to herself as to readers? How does that move add interest to the story?

O.K., You’re Not Shakespeare. Now Get Back to Work

ALLEGRA GOODMAN

They say writing is lonely work. But that’s an exaggeration. Even alone at their desks, writers entertain visitors: characters of a novel, famous and not so famous figures from the past. On good days, all these come to the table. On bad days, however, only unwelcome visitors appear: The specter of the third-grade teacher who despaired of your penmanship. The ghost of the first person who told you that spelling counts. The voice of reason pointing out that what you are about to attempt has already been done — and done far better than you might even hope.

So why bother? Why even begin? It is, after all, abundantly clear that you are not Henry James. Your themes are hackneyed, your style imitative. As for your emotions, memories, insights, and invented characters, what makes you think anyone will care? These are the perfectly logical questions of the famous, petty, and implacable inner critic.

What should a writer do when the inner critic comes to call? How to silence these disparaging whispers? I have no magic cure, but here, from my own experience, is a modest proposal to combat the fiend.

Details in the opening paragraphs introduce the general theme of the narrative: a writer’s self-doubts.

Forget the past. Nothing stops the creative juices like thoughts of the literary tradition. “You’ll never be John Donne!” your inner critic shrieks. Or: “Middlemarch! Now that was a book!” These thoughts used to fill me with gloom. Then I went to graduate school at Stanford, and I steeped myself in Shakespeare, Wordsworth, and Defoe. The experience set me free.

It happened like this. I was sitting in Green Library trying to write a story, and I looked at all the shelves of books around me, and suddenly the obvious occurred to me. All the great Romantic poets and Elizabethan playwrights and Victorian novelists that tower over me — they’re dead! Oh, they still cast their shadow, but I’m alive, and they are irrefutably dead. Their language is exquisite, their scenes divine, but what have these writers done lately? Not a damn thing. Think about it. The idea should give you hope. Past masters are done. Their achievements are finite, known, measurable. Present writers, on the other hand, live in possibility. Your masterpiece could be just around the corner. Genius could befall you at any moment.

“Well,” your inner critic counters gloomily, “just remember that when you’re gone, your books will suffer the same fate as all the rest. They’ll be relics at best. More likely, they’ll just languish in obscurity.” To which I have to say: So what? I won’t be around to care.

Carpe diem. Know your literary tradition, savor it, steal from it, but when you sit down to write, forget about worshiping greatness and fetishizing masterpieces. If your inner critic continues to plague you with invidious comparisons, scream, “Ancestor worship!” and leave the building.

Treat writing as a sacred act. Just as the inner critic loves to dwell on the past, she delights in worrying about the future. “Who would want to read this?” she demands. “Nobody is going to publish a book like that!” Such nagging can incapacitate unpublished writers. Published writers, on the other hand, know that terrible books come out all the time. They anguish: “The reviewers are going to crucify me, and nobody will want to publish me after that.”

But take a step back. What are you really afraid of here? When you come down to it, this is just a case of the inner critic masquerading as public opinion, and playing on your vanity.

I know only one way out of this trap, which is to concentrate on your writing itself, for itself. Figuring out what the public wants, or even what the public is: That's the job of pollsters and publicists and advertisers. All those people study the marketplace. But the creative artist can change the world. A true writer opens people's ears and eyes, not merely playing to the public, but changing minds and lives. This is sacred work. . . .

The story turns personal and its setting is specific.

Goodman offers glimpses into her thinking as a writer.

Goodman's personal reflections lead to advice for would-be writers.

Ultimately every writer must choose between safety and invention; between life as a literary couch potato and imaginative exercise. You must decide which you like better, the perfectionist within or the flawed pages at hand.

Perhaps you'd rather hold yourself to the impossibly high standards of writers long dead. Or perhaps you'd rather not waste time writing something that will go unpublished, unnoticed, and unread. You have received no encouragement from anyone else, and so you would never think of encouraging yourself. Or you choose to be a realist. You're smart enough to see your talent is limited, your gift too small to pursue. You can convince yourself of all this, or you can listen to your imagination instead. You can fire yourself up with words and voices. You can look out into the world teeming with stories and cast your net.